Nearly a Serious Accident.

Yesterday about noon, as Mrs. W. D. Rice witnesses of the accident, removed Mrs. Jones to Goetz's drug store, where under the ministrations of Dr. Bagley she shortly recovered and was able to proceed home. It was a narrow escape from serious injury.

It will be in charge of a New York gentleman, who is getting out samples. The works will run steadily until January 1.

Supreme Court of Appeals.

This court opened at 10 o'clock a. m. yesterday, all of the judges being present.

State of West Virginia vs. R. R. Fishman, from Monroe county; opinion by Judge Dent; judgment of circuit court reversed and new trial awarded.

Fishman was convicted of forgery and on the 23rd of March he was sentenced to imprisonment for two years in the penitentiary. The note alleged to have been forged was set out in full in the indictment, but the note offered in evidence was materially different from the copy thus presented. For this error the judgment is reversed and the case goes back for a new trial. Adjourned until 10 a. m. to-day.

The Coleman Field.

The locality that has not yet an oil field in sight is away behind the prosecution, says the Oil City Derrick. The latest imaginary field is introduced at or near Coleman, Belmont county, Ohio, and the fakirs, who have been sending out telegrams from Wheeling, Bellaire and other points, make the modest claim that the new strike will produce 100 barrels a day. The well is located near Coleman, on the Starbuck farm, and is not expected to get the sand (the Boreas) before next Monday. George Heard, who is jointly interested with Howard Thompson and the West Virginia Natural Gas Company in drilling this venture, came up from the well Wednesday evening, and says the reports put in circulation are all manufactured and have no truth in them. He had no hesitancy in saying that he thought the well would be a duster.

Saturday night is a busy night for how crowded we look, come in anyway. We can wait on you.

THE LARGEST CLASS

That Ever Left the Linsly Institute was Graduated

AT THE OPERA HOUSE YESTERDAY.

Thirty-two Young Men Finish the Course and Make Their Farewell Appearance as Linsly Cadets—The Weather Compels a Change of Arrangements, but all the Exercises were Creditable, and Enjoyed by a Large Assemblage.

The annual commencement of the Linsly Institute came off yesterday afternoon, not exactly "according to programme," but nevertheless it was a very creditable affair, notwithstanding untoward circumstances. The rains of the night and morning had made the ground so muddy that a march to the State fair grounds was out of the question, and therefore the outdoor features of the affair, pleasant as they usually are, had to be omitted or modified. It was decided under these circumstances to have the exercises in the Opera House, and it was a flattering testimonial to the hold this institution has on the public that in spite of the short notice possible, the theatre was packed up and down, and yet not nearly all the people who desired could secure seats.

The Opera House band played several selections in front of the house, and afterwards rendered a medley of patriotic airs inside, while the audience was being seated. The class was an unusually large one, numbering thirty-two. The members were seated in a large semi-circle, with the faculty and officials of the institute at the ends.

Rev. Dr. W. H. Cooke opened the exercises with a fervent and fitting prayer, and after another beautiful selection by the band, the salutatorian was introduced. Mr. James McAdams Collins had won this honor, and he bore it gracefully and with distinguished credit to himself and the school. His paper was very well written and well read, and his words of welcome to the audience and regret at the severing of past associations were feeling and naturally expressed. He evinced an easy self-possession which was a real character of the Linsly boys, and is not the least pleasing evidence of the efficiency of the institution in fitting young men for the battles of life.

L. P. Martin read an essay on "The Problem of To-day," which was very practical and full of common sense. All the pupils but the salutatorian and valedictorian were limited to two minutes, and they all made fine use of the time, and they all made fine use of the time until one tries to see how much he can crowd in.

E. D. Adams's subject was "The Strength of Government," and William E. Caldwell's "Master of Invention." Both papers showed they were original. Both were interesting and the thoughts well put. John T. Carter's oration, "Fortune Helps the Brave," was particularly original and bright.

John M. Wilson was excused at the last moment on account of illness. J. Edgar Sweeney talked about the "Age of Giants," contrasting the intellectual strength of to-day with the physical strength of the past, much to the credit of this age.

E. K. Wheat gave a very interesting and somewhat amusing account of the life of a Roman citizen in the days when "To be a Roman was greater than a king."

He evidently did not think much of the kindly old Roman as compared to the American of this day, and showed good reasons for his view.

G. W. Alexander talked appreciatively of "Imagination and Grit." J. W. Hughes gave a very entertaining and witty history of the class, the largest that ever graduated from the institute. William L. Gilleland won the greatest applause of the afternoon with an up-to-date oration, entitled "America's Greatest Statesman," in which he gave James G. Blaine that lofty place, and made a succinct review of his life and career, closing with a hearty and graceful eulogy.

J. H. Davies read a thoughtful paper on "Behavior." G. E. Waterhouse talked about "American Life," showing the progress of an age in this land, and paying a high tribute to its governmental system.

"What Civilization Has Not Accomplished" was the suggestive title of S. E. Giffin's paper. He held that civilization would not have attained its destined end until peace was universal, all nations gently and the only aristocracy the aristocracy of brains.

J. H. Montgomery delivered an historical oration on "The Battle of Saratoga," and he closed with a consideration of the effects of the outcome of that struggle. H. M. Robb took the appropriate title "Montani Semper Liberi," and he showed that in his history this had been true, down to the formation of the State of West Virginia.

H. M. Russell had availed himself of an always entrancing theme, "Legends of our Valley," was the title of his interesting discourse, and he briefly sketched some of the pioneers' achievements. His delivery was natural and in keeping with the style of his paper.

W. K. Behout was excused. G. K. Tinker talked in a very practical, common sense vein of "Winning Forces," and Morgan O. Hart had for his subject, "And What Next?" The successive steps of the human race in securing dominion over the earth and the fulness thereof, the seas and even the elements of the air were reviewed, and the duty of all who live in this age to help on to new triumphs, was earnestly dwelt upon.

"A Gentleman of the Nineteenth Century" was defined by A. A. Wilson as not a dude, but a man of sterling worth who achieves success by deserving it. W. Clyde North read a very creditable essay on "Charlemagne," and A. T. Kasey asked "What Shall We Invest?"

He regarded the closing of the school life as the dissolution of a dream, and then went into a consideration of the future and its new investments.

H. C. Hazlett was received with much applause. He showed considerable familiarity with modern progress in his essay on the advancement of science in the past decade.

Walter C. Sweeney showed a high appreciation of "The Influence of Woman," and G. A. Pryor read a vigorous "Class Prophecy." It was a very flowing effort and made a hit. The allusions to classmates were very frank and kept the audience laughing. C. H. Quimby and William Otto had been excused, and G. L. Caldwell was next introduced and spoke on "Aristocracy of Mind." He held that the leadership that has an influence for good is that of intellect, and not of birth and wealth.

"Hannibal and Napoleon" was the subject of Jesse W. Speld's historical essay, and he treated it in a very interesting way, contrasting the two great generals in character and careers.

"American Patriotism," W. G. Wagner held in his oration that that subject, always rose to the occasion when a sacrifice, even of life, was demanded of an American citizen.

Joseph Randolph Naylor, the valedictorian, represented his class most creditably. He was easily first as to oratorical style, his voice and bearing being admirable, while his oration was gracefully composed and full of good thoughts. He showed that fortune does not always favor the brave by such instances as the charge of the Six Hundred and that of Pickett's brigade at Gettysburg and by the covering of men who failed of their ambitions. He drew the lesson that all should depend on their own efforts rather than on the smiles of the fickle goddess of chance. His words of farewell to the trustees, the faculty and the class were feeling and well put. His address was in keeping with the others on the programme, of which it was very lustily and by many means that they never heard better ones. So, indeed, has so young a pupil as Mr. Naylor, and himself with such credit in all respects.

Principal John M. Birch announced that it had been decided to have the dress parade and presentation of diplomas at the corner of Fourteenth and Eoff streets, and thither the crowd repaired.

In connection with the dress parade the following was read:

LINSLY INSTITUTE, June 21.

General Orders, No. 2.

"The officers to command next year's battalion will be as follows, rank having been assigned according to general merit:

Major, Morgan Clarke.

Captains, R. Boyd, H. Milligan, H. Pollock.

Adjutant and first lieutenant, T. Cummins.

First lieutenants, W. H. Brunhaus, W. Lallance, W. Higgs, I. Emsheimer.

Second lieutenants, D. White, C. B. McClain, D. Faris, E. Hughes.

Sergeant major, S. Jones.

Sergeants, G. Wise, A. Fair, J. Johnson, F. Halleck, V. Smith, S. Frank, R. Dillon.

By order of the Principal.

W. C. P. Muir,

Lieut. U. S. Navy and Commandant of Corps.

The diplomas were then presented by Mr. A. W. Campbell, president of the board of trustees. He said the board and the community were justly proud of the proportions to which the school had grown, and grateful to the government for detailing an officer of skill and experience, so that it was possible to have a military department on such a basis. Upon receiving their diplomas the graduates gave three cheers for the class of 1896, to which the younger pupils responded with three hearty cheers for the class of '95, and the cadets and auditors dispersed, all alike more than satisfied with the day's performances.

Sunday at the Y. M. C. A.

Rev. Dr. O. W. Holmes, pastor of the First M. E. Church, of Bellaire, will address the men's meeting at the Young Men's Christian Association building to-morrow afternoon at 4 o'clock.
